Let's Start!

Let's review!

Learning Outcome

Understand detailed descriptions of real or imaginary events and experiences in present, past or future, in spoken interactions or written texts.

Ask your partner:

- What kind of epic experiences have you had?
- If you could explore space, the sea or underground, which would you choose to explore and why?

Can Do Statements

- I can express complex statements using words like who, that or which.
- I can express strong disapproval or refuse politely using if.
- I can express true, untrue and possible events in present.

Let's Explore!

Vanessa and Michelle plan on exploring Mars!

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

- Vanessa: Well, that really was an epic experience. Michelle, I learned so many cool bits of information, which I think will definitely stick with me for a long time.
- Michelle: You're welcome, Vanessa. Since you liked stargazing, I'll take you to other amazing places. If you like, we can check out another place next week.
- Vanessa: That would be fantastic! Let me check my schedule first, I might be busy next week. I might have to decline.
- Michelle: Okay. If you come, I'll bring my kids, who I think will enjoy this experience very much. It should be fun stargazing with a bigger group.
- Vanessa: That sounds like fun! Oh. I'm sorry Michelle, but next week it looks like the restaurant staff and I have a big meeting.
- Michelle: Oh it's no problem. It might be raining next week anyways. So, are you reconsidering the Mars exploration idea?
- Vanessa: Of course not! I should be able to find tons of research material on it. You should also call your friend who you think can help us. He must know a lot about Mars.
- Michelle: That sounds like a great plan! He should be available to meet next week. Why don't you come as well? If you agree to come, I'll convince him to join us on this project.
- Vanessa: Well, I have to see. It really depends on the head chef, who is usually bent on having me stay late. If he doesn't allow me to come, I obviously can't make it. Anyway, if he won't let me leave early, I can't.
- Michelle: Well, please try. Tell him if he is willing to let you off the hook, we'll make room for him to come to Mars with us!
- Vanessa: If you don't mind, I would rather not ask him to come. He won't be so easily enticed. Besides, I will not spend another disastrous social evening with him.
- Michelle: We will have fun no matter what happens.

Let's Practice!

Michelle didn't think inviting Vanessa's boss was a good idea.

Instructions: Match the beginnings on the left with their endings on the right.

COLUMN A

1. If you like, we can
2. If you agree to come,
3. If he doesn't allow me to come,
4. Tell him if he is willing to let you off the hook,
5. If you don't mind,

COLUMN B

- a. check out another place next week.
- b. I'll convince him to join us on this project.
- c. I would rather not ask him to come.
- d. obviously I can't make it.
- e. We'll make room for him to come to Mars with us.

Let's Practice!

Vanessa thanks Michelle for the experience.

Instructions: Underline the part of the sentences which the relative pronouns refer to. Read the sentences aloud. Check your pronunciation with your instructor.

1. I really learned so many cool bits of information which will definitely stick with me for a long time.
2. If you come, I'll bring my kids, who I think will enjoy this experience very much.
3. I'm sorry Michele, but next week it looks like the restaurant staff and I have a big meeting which I really can't compromise.
4. You should also call your friend who you think can help us.
5. It really depends on the head chef who is usually bent on having me stay late.

Extension Activity

Organize a stargazing date.

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- Go online or to your local library to find information about a spot in your city where you can see stars clearly.
- Write a dialogue between two people: One is asking the other to go to see the stars at the spot and the other is refusing at first.
- Read the dialogue aloud and then switch roles.

Self-Assessment

Yes

No

Target Words

- epic (adjective): impressively great
e.g. Well, that really was an epic experience.
- to decline (verb): to refuse
e.g. I might have to decline your offer because I am too busy.
- to reconsider (verb): to think about again
e.g. Why are you reconsidering the Mars exploration idea? Is it too expensive?
- exploration (noun): the act of discovering something new or learning something new e.g. So, are you reconsidering the Mars exploration idea?
- bent on (expression): to be firm on purpose and belief, determined e.g. The head chef is usually bent on having me stay late.
- off the hook (expression): no longer in difficulty or trouble
e.g. If he is willing to let you off the hook, we'll make room for him to come to Mars with us!
- to entice (verb): to convince or make appealing
Example: He won't be so easily enticed.

Learning Points

Subject and Object Relative Clauses

You can use relative clauses to modify a noun. This can be both the subject and object of the sentence.

Depending on the noun you are referring to, you may have to create a defining relative clause or a non-defining relative clause. These may also be called restrictive and non-restrictive adjective clauses, respectively.

A defining relative clause is necessary to explain which noun you are talking about. A non-defining relative clause is extra, non-essential information about the noun. You need to use commas with this clause.

Relative pronouns are also important in relative clauses.

Subject Relative Pronouns		Object Relative Pronouns
who	for people	whom
which	for things	which
that	for people/ things	that
whose	to show possession for people/things	whose

That is interchangeable for both people and things, but it is more commonly used to refer to things. Who is only used for people.

In relative clauses modifying an object where a preposition is needed with a verb, if the preposition is placed before the relative pronoun, only whom or which can be used. Do not use that in this instance.

Examples:

- You should also call your friend who you think can help us.
- I'm sorry Michelle, but next week it looks like the restaurant staff and I have a big meeting, which I really can't compromise.
- It really depends on the head chef, who is usually bent on having me stay late.
- The head chef, who is my boss, insists that I stay late at work.

Learning Points

Modal Verbs for Speculating about the Present

You can speculate about present situations using modal verbs. These verbs convey a special meaning and are followed by the base form of the verb.

Each of the following words carries a different meaning. You need to choose the correct one based on what you want to say.

Modal Verbs	Meaning	Example
will/ won't	100% certain	He won't be so easily enticed. must	almost certain	He must know a lot about Mars. may/might/could	likely	I may/might/could be busy next week. can't	almost impossible	I obviously can't make it. can	possibility in general	We can check out another place next week.
should/shouldn't	likely to happen if other conditions are met as expected	He should call us before 8.

Will is also used with if to show polite requests, refusals and disapproval. Using will in the if-clause for these reasons is different from expressing future possibility. Remember, an if-clause is a dependent clause and cannot stand alone. It must be added to a dependent clause to make a complete sentence.

if you will →	if you wouldn't mind
if you won't →	if you refuse
if you will →	if you insist on

Examples:

- I will not spend another disastrous social evening with him.
- If he won't let me leave early, I can't.
